

Dallas has been transformed, in great part, by the civic, economic and cultural contributions of Mexican Americans and the barrios that dot its landscape. The majority of immigrants fled to the United States during the Mexican Revolution of 1910. Mexican Americans played a pivotal role in the growth of Dallas as a city – from construction work and manufacturing, to business entrepreneurs and community leaders.

Witness a showcase of significant events, places, and people as the story of Mexican Americans in Dallas unfolds before your eyes. Major moments in migration and labor exemplify the struggles and successes of an ever expanding culture. The Dallas Mexican American Historical League and the Old Red Museum proudly present a photographic exhibition charting 100 years of progress.
